Bush: We are winning the war

President says critics falling prey to defeatism

Opponents say he has yet to set benchmarks to show the U.S. is making progress in Iraq.

WASHINGTON — President Bush on Sunday declared that America is winning the war in Iraq but warned that it's premature to withdraw U.S. troops.

Speaking from the Oval Office — where he launched the war nearly three years ago —

Bush took on critics of the war who argue for a U.S. pullout.

"Defeatism may have its partisan uses, but it is not justified by the facts," the president said. "For every scene of destruction in Iraq, there are more scenes of rebuilding and hope. For every life lost, there are countless more lives reclaimed. And for every terrorist working to stop freedom in Iraq, there are many more Iraqis and Americans working to defeat them."

Looking straight into the camera and pointing a finger forward, Bush declared: "Not only

President Bush, in a nationally televised speech Sunday, declared that Iraq's elections signal the birth of democracy in the Middle East, arguing against a U.S. troop pullout while acknowledging the doubts of some that the war is lost and not worth another dime or another day.

Sharon critical to peace hopes

The Israeli leader could be sidelined for some time after a mild stroke.

JERUSALEM — The mild stroke suffered by Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon on Sunday abruptly raised the question of what would happen to Mideast peace prospects if the 77-year-old leader is incapacitated.

Sharon's condition quickly improved, and his doctor said he was expected to be released from the hospital after a few days. Sharon aides said he was lucid and in control of the government.

The prime minister never lost consciousness and was talking and joking with his family hours after arriving at Jerusalem's Hadassah Hospital, doctors said. He was treated with blood thinners and suffered no damage from the stroke, said his personal physician, Boleslaw Goldman.

"He's lucid, he's fully functional," Sharon aide Raanan Gissin said.

Sharon's transformation in recent times from hawk to pragmatist — becoming the first Israeli leader to relinquish land the Palestinians claim for a future state — has led many Israelis to view him as their best chance for peace.

Just four weeks ago, Sharon set off a political earthquake by leaving the hard-line Likud Party he helped found in the

Region's top TSA managers paid top dollar

Their counterparts in private industry earn, on average, nearly $20,000 less.

The top Transportation Security Administration managers at Pittsburgh International Airport earn far more than their counterparts in private industry, and critics say the government salaries are excessive.

The top 10 TSA managers based at the Findlay Township, Allegheny County, airport earn an average of nearly $20,000 more than Pittsburgh-area workers in similar positions at private companies, according to a Tribune-Review analysis of TSA salaries with U.S. Department of Labor data. One employee, Dale Palmer, a training manager, is paid $48,000 more than the local average for training managers in private industry.

U.S. Rep. John Mica, R-Fla., called for an investigation of the TSA earlier this year because of the high salaries it pays to managers. Mica argues that the agency has too many managers and pays them far more than it should.

"The TSA's middle management has grown into a full-fledged bureaucracy, well beyond anything we intended or envisioned," said Gary Burns, a Mica spokesman.

President Bush approved forming the federal agency in 2002 after the 9/11 terrorist attacks to help protect airline travelers. The agency employs 45,000 screeners and supervisors nationwide — about 350 at Pittsburgh International. Airline passengers pay an extra $2.50 per trip to help pay for security costs. The agency has been the target of frequent criticism regarding security breaches, felons hired as screeners and mismanagement.

Last week, House Homeland Security Subcommittee Chairman Dan Lungren, R-Calif., proposed legislation that would restructure the TSA to improve its performance.

"More than four years after the attacks on 9/11, TSA has received extremely poor grades in several areas of aviation security, including passenger prescreening, explosives detection and air cargo screening," Lungren said. "We are taking the steps necessary to enhance aviation security across the country, while reducing the frustrations of legitimate airline passengers and eliminating wasteful government spending."

Locally, an internal investigation of alleged employee abuse and intimidation at Pittsburgh International Airport culminated in the forced resignations of the TSA's three lead managers.

Nordstrom again being discussed for Pittsburgh area

Developers push the benefits of locating in the city instead of the suburbs.

A Nordstrom department store belongs in downtown Pittsburgh instead of in a suburban mall, said a developer involved in the effort to rebuild the city's core.

"If I'm Nordstrom, I'd want to draw from the widest possible area. If (Nordstrom) were Downtown, it could pull from the North Hills, South Hills and the Monroeville area," said Lucas Piatt, real estate director of Millcraft Industries Inc.

PNC Financial Services Group Inc. Chairman and CEO James E. Rohr and Gov. Ed Rendell are expected to announce at a news conference this morning details of a $170 million office/condominium/hotel project on properties PNC owns on the north side of Fifth Avenue adjacent to its headquarters building.

Washington County-based Millcraft last week said it will spend up to $50 million turning the closed Lazarus building Downtown into a condominium complex named Piatt Place with a mix of retail and office space on the first three floors.

Seattle-based Nordstrom, an upscale department store chain known for excellent customer service and top-notch merchandise, backed out of Pittsburgh Mayor Tom Murphy's initial plan to rebuild the Downtown core. Nordstrom now is known to be interested in locations at two Pittsburgh-area malls.

PNC will follow Millcraft as the second
